WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A cool weather system with mainly light rain or snow moved across Northern California late Sunday and overnight. It is now exiting our geographic area, as it deepens southeast toward Arizona. Precipitation totals appear to have mainly stayed under a quarter-inch for areas not in or near the northwestern corner of the state (final figures are not all in yet, as there is still some snow to melt into non-heated buckets). A post-frontal ridge of high pressure aloft is now centered not too far west of the Pacific North West and Northern California. This ridge will provide cool but increasingly sunny weather in Northern California as we progress through the day, along with fueling the onset of mostly light north to northeast breezes. The next weather system should be on the light side, precipitation-wise. It drops south across Oregon and into North California tomorrow night to early Wednesday, as it moves down the front side of the larger-scale offshore ridge. The center of high pressure transitions northeastward after midweek, becoming anchored near the Washington - British Columbia border Thursday night into the weekend. High pressure influence looks sufficiently strong that it could keep all of Northern California dry from Wednesday afternoon through next Sunday. As headlined above though, drying northeast (foehn-type) winds could be in place during much of that period.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Surface high pressure over Northern California will bring north winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph to the south coast of Santa Barbara and to the Grapevine. The back side of a Pacific trough will bring below normal temperatures to the region through Thursday, with mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and mid 50s to mid 60s in the valleys. An area of low pressure will form over Nevada causing temperatures to cool a few degrees Friday and Saturday. Northeast to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Thursday morning through Saturday morning. Minimum humidity will be between 20% and 40% through Wednesday and then drop to 15% to 30% Thursday through Saturday. A Pacific storm will approach the West Coast bringing an increase in humidity Sunday and possibly some rain by Monday morning depending on its exact track.
